THE BRANDUS SALE.

The pictures selling to-night and to-morrow night at the Waldorf-Astoria are described as "ancient, and rare" and consist in the main, we understand, of "Superb Portraits of Beautiful Court Ladies in Gorgeous Costumes."

In the quality of spectator we have been interested for some time in the popular game of fitting Beautiful Court Ladies to the Gorgeous Costumes of French and Spanish painters of the past and guessing their names. It is a fascinating sport, and though there is apt to be a certain sameness in the various styles of simper labelled Porbus, Clouet, Coello, &c., yet a remarkable play of fancy is often shown in the establishment of the sitters' identity. Unfortunately Mr. Brandus sent us no invitation, and thinking it possible that the oversight was not unpremeditated we were content to make the most of a borrowed catalogue. This, though it has a few illustrations, is a poor enough substitute for the exhibition, but even catalogues are better than nothing, and we found this one sufficiently entertaining in its way. It gave at least some notion of the lively fancy which we have spoken of.

One of the finest examples of this is the portrait of "Eleonora de Valois: Wife of Philip II." (93), ascribed to Zuccherio. Philip had a reasonable number of wives in his time, but this one is not mentioned in the authorized lists. Such trivial slips do not count in this game, however, and we would not hesitate in taking the portrait (as Mr. Brandus probably would have it) to be that of Isabel (or Elizabeth) de Valois, Philip's third wife, only unfortunately Zuccherio was in Italy during her lifetime, nor did he go to Spain till 1555 or 1558; that is to say, some fifteen or twenty years after her death. We are therefore forced to accept one of two conclusions, either that the portrait is not of Philip's queen or that it is not by Zuccherio. It is only fair to add, however, that possibly both conclusions are acceptable.

Another curious misfit is the portrait of "Eleonora Tolletana" (124) given to Juan Carreño de Miranda. If Mr. Brandus means the lady who generally goes under that name, sister of the Duke of Alba and wife of Cosimo de Medici, there is the grave objection that she lived in the century before the painter to whom she is supposed to have sat, but as the name appears to be a favorite of his, it is of course conceivable that he means any Nell of Toledo. As to the "Infanta Isabel Claire" of Sanchez Coello (180), we have an authentic portrait of her at the Prado, only it is not at all like the reproduction in this catalogue. It is true that the Prado picture shows her as a child of about 11 or 12, whereas the Brandus example is of a young woman presumably 25 years old or so. There is, however, another authentic portrait by Pantoja de la Cruz, which represents the same subject at the age of 33, and though we have tried very earnestly to discover some sort of resemblance between the head of Mr. Brandus's picture on the portraits at the Prado on the other, it was to no purpose, nor were we fortunate in detecting any likeness in his picture to the characteristic hands of the sitter; so that we are compelled to think that it represents somebody else or that the Infanta underwent a remarkable metamorphosis for a brief period of her life.

These examples will suffice to show the fascination of this business of naming pictures, a fascination only enhanced by the risks run and the recklessness with which the name-hunters pursue their quarry.

THE BRANDUS PAINTINGS.

Large Sale of Modern, Recent, and Old Pictures at Auction.

Nearly two hundred pictures by more than one hundred painters, living, lately deceased, recent and old, some of them masters acknowledged by everybody, others favorites to-day, yesterday, or long ago, are hung in the Silo, otherwise known as the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries. There will be two nights devoted to the sale of these canvases in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, Wednesday and Thursday, March 29 and 30. They are part of the stock in trade of Mr. Edward Brandus, the well-known dealer, whose galleries are next to the new building going up for Tiffany & Co. on Fifth Avenue.

On Wednesday Mr. Silo, the auctioneer, will dispose of ninety-six pictures, including a small interior, with figure, by Meissonier, which purports to be Rembrandt before his easel, leaning back in his chair as he surveys a canvas. The portrait of Rembrandt, if indeed the artist intended a likeness, is not recognizable, but no one will quarrel with the precious handling of the figure, easel, bench, and table, and the flood of light falling from a window behind the artist on his side face and palette. It is 8¼ by 6¾ inches, and was in the Meissonier sale, 1893. A "Neapolitan Girl," three-quarters length, by Corot, has the charm and the drawbacks of figures by the master of Villa d'Avray—whose square-built figure, seated in the open before his easel, is shown in another picture (by Louis Kratke) as he looked when painting the scenery of Avray. A decorative half-length said to represent the Princess Margaret of Parma is an example of the stiff and formal style of Alonso Sanchez Coello, with perhaps some reinforcement of red on the lips. Several good specimens of Fritz Thaulow's river and town scenes are in the Wednesday sale, a "Bridge at Verona," "The Abbeville Canal," and "On the River Arques," the last named the best. A gorgeously yet stiffly attired lady, with enormous slashed sleeves, is said to be Eleonora di Medici, and is assigned to Bronzino; it is a picture from the Gavet collection. Delightfully painted is the half-length of a young girl, with her hands laid over each other at the wrists in a very "precious" attitude, assigned to Van der Helst of Haarlem. A young Dutch peasant woman, half-length, attributed to Nicolas Maes, is remarkable for the powerful muscular development of the arms and hands and the Jordaeens-like insistence on the features—altogether an interesting problem for connoisseurs.

Thursday's sale has more important canvases, notably a very unusual picture by J. F. Millet, a young shepherdess seated at the foot of a tree, with sunlight scattering down from the left on her lap, where she holds her spindle, and a reflection of light illuminating the neck and cheek on the other side. It has been in the possession of Boussod-Valadon and of Montaignac of Paris. "The Russian Courier" is a Schreyer of the best chop; "The Parting Cup," a little Meissonier of the finest sort, (No. 60 on the catalogue of the Secretan sale,) an out-of-doors cabinet picture with rider drinking and tavern maid standing to take the glass. A portrait of Eleonora Gonzaga is attributed to Palma Vecchia, and a likeness of Isabella Brandt, the wife of the painter, to Rubens. Very quaint and very Spanish in type is the Princess Isabella Clara, by Coelho, standing in stiff, bell-shaped skirt, enormously long sleeves, and fanlike immense erect collar, deeply indented and fluted, her right forearm resting on a stand. She wears a tall diadem edged with pearls above her high-piled hair, and big pear-shaped pearls at her ears, not to speak of the broad, square jewels in the rings on her fingers, painted with marvelous precision, and the elaborate parures, fringed with pearls, that hang against her stiff, armorlike bodice. An ugly lady, but impressive through the elaborateness of her uncomfortable attire.

A single figure, with a cupid riding pick-up-back, is signed Bouguereau, and dated 1904. Another single figure, and a very excellent one, is by Meissonier and called "Waiting," the person being a cavalier of the d'Artagnan kind, who is presuming to expect a brother duelist. There are two good "River Landscapes" by Daubigny, 12½ by 6½ inches, a characteristic head by J. J. Henner, and a very able and attractive bust of a gentleman by Pierre Mignard, entered in the catalogue as a portrait of Louis XIV. A man in seventeenth-century costume with a cello, by Roybet; a Fontainebleau view by Diaz, a "Gorges d'Apremont" by Rousseau, a group of poultry by Charles Jacque, a marine by Jules Dupré, the delightfully robust head of a Dutch woman, attributed to Govaert Flink, and three excellent landscapes by Léon Richet, should be examined with care. These two sales will be worth following. The collection is most varied and contains good, bad, and indifferent, to suit all tastes.

PAINTINGS BRING $53,035.

A Meissonier Sells for Highest Figure at Brandus Auction.

A total of $53,035 was received for the first night's sale of the collection of modern and ancient paintings of Edward Brandus, held in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria last evening. John Graham paid $1,050 for "Abbeville Canal," by Frits Thaulow, and the last big price of the evening was paid by W. W. Johns for "Venice," by Ziem. In all ninety-four pictures were sold, two catalogued being crossed off. About the same number will be sold to-night, concluding the sale. James De Wolf Cutting bought a number of paintings.

OTHER HIGH PRICES PAID

A Schreyer Sells for $11,500, a Coello for $7,500 and a Corot for $7,050, Swelling the Total to $184,105.

In the Waldorf-Astoria ball room last night a total of $131,070 was obtained at the second and concluding session of the sale of the Brandus collection of pictures.
This result was not only gratifying to Mr.
Brandus and to the auctioneer, Mr. James P. Silo, but was considered remarkably good by the collectors and art lovers present. The total, added to that of Wednesday evening's sale, $53,035, makes a grand total for 192 canvases of $184,105.

An interesting example of Millet, "The Seated Spinner," which came from Bous-sod-Valadon and M. Montaignac, of Paris, to Mr. Brandus, brought the large sum of $24,100, and was purchased by Mr. Eugene Fischhof, a Paris expert. There was spirited bidding for the picture, and Mr.
Fischhof had to fight for its possession.

The second highest figure of the sale, $11,500, was brought by a Schreyer, which James H. Moore, an agent, procured for an unknown buyer. To Mr. L. A. Lanthier went Coello's "Portrait of Isabelle Claire," from the collections of Queen Isa-bella of Spain, and Emile Gravet.

and interesting example of Corot, "Sou-

ODDITIES IN BRANDUS SALE.

Canvas Attributed to Rubens, for Instance, Is Sold for $1,700.

There were several unusual features about the prices realized at the second session of the sale of the Brandus pictures in the Waldorf-Astoria last night. A canvas attributed to Rubens was bought by J. B. Smith for $1,700; a large Troyon went to A. W. Bishop for $975; a Pourbus sold for $500, and a Sir Peter Lely for $875.

Another odd thing was the evenness of the bids on the Thaulows. Of the five sold at the two sessions three went for $1,050 apiece, one for $1,075 and another for $1,100. The total for last night's sale was $131,070, about a dozen buyers getting the ninety-seven pictures sold. Eugene Fischhop was one of the most generous purchasers. He paid the highest price of the evening, $24,100 for a figure by Millet called "The Seated Spinner." He gave $7,050 for a Corot, $4,200 for Meissonier's "L'Attente," $175 for a Nicholas Miguard and $1,750 for Gerome's "Feeding the Pigeons." Other high prices were: Eleven thousand five hundred dollars paid by Joseph A. Moore, agent, for Schreyer's "A Russian Courier," a worthy price for an excellent picture; $2,300 for Meissonier's "Parting Cup"; $7,500 by L. A. Lauthier for Coello's "Princess Isabelle"; $2,000 by John Fenning for Cazin's "Harvest"; $3,400 by G. W. Patterson for Ziem's "On the Bosphorus," and $1,400 by Louis Ralston for a head by J. J. Henner.

Roybet's "Expert" brought $1,700; Gainsborough-Dupont's portrait of Mrs. Lowndes Stone-Norton, $1,550. Spencer P. Shottger paid $2,525 for Rosa Bonheur's "Ploughing"; A. W.
